

THEATERS

"Captain Kidd, Jr."

As may be inferred by the title, this is a story of buried treasure. In this case the treasure is of a very original nature. The grandfather of Willie Carleton puts his will in a book about pirates and their buried treasure and the book is bought by a second-hand book store, run by Angus MacTavish whose granddaughter and a young author named Jim Gleason live with him. After the book gets into the hands of Mary MacTavish young Carleton, his grandfather's lawyer, and the dead man's private secretary, come to the book store and try to buy it back, but Mary has already discovered the paper. It shows where a buried treasure is to be found, and the rightful owner agrees to share it with the MacTavish crowd if they will help him dig for it. The place is an old farm that once belonged to the elder Carleton but is now owned by Lem Butterfield. Pretending to be geologists looking for specimens, the party engage board with the Butterfields and proceed to dig holes all over the place. Before the buried treasure is found the suspicious of the town constable and his neighbors are excited and the officer of the law keeps a close watch on the diggers. The lawyer and the private secretary arrive and try to prevent the search. When the box is found and opened it contains a note stating that the treasure mentioned in the will is a store of good health which young Carleton is bound to gain if he digs up enough of the farm during his hunt. On going back to the city the heir finds that the hunt was only a test, and the lawyer has been holding his fortune in trust. Mary, who bought the farm with money left her by her mother, sells it at a big advance to a man who wants to run a railroad through it. Jim Gleason disposes of one of his novels to a publisher and spunks up the courage to ask Mary an important question. He is so pleased with her answer that he starts to embrace her. Finish.

"The Little Comrade"

While none may rave over this picture, yet hardly anyone will leave your theater dissatisfied; almost every one will feel the time was spent enjoyably. "The Little Comrade," same as all Miss Martin's contributions, is of the light, airy sort, the kind that make one grin with pleasure leaving a pleasant taste behind. It is a delightful romance, and though it touches some on military life, such as existed in the camps during the war, it depicts not enough of it to make it appear as being a war play.

The story deals with farmerettes, and is more or less a satire on them. The heroine, a wealthy girl, determines to enlist as a farmerette. When she goes to the farm, she takes along her dog, and has silk overalls to wear. There she meets the hero, and they fall in love. The young hero enlists, but being unable to drive her from his mind, deserts and returns to her; she, however, makes him realize what his duty is. He turned to the camp and makes a good soldier.

"The Service Star"

Magnetic Madge Kennedy appears at last in a real out-and-out drama. It is "The Service Star" and, as its title indicates, it is of extreme timeliness, appealing as it does to every owner of a service flag. When it comes to the Maui Theaters next week, admirers of the Goldwyn star are promised the double delight of seeing her in a straight dramatic role and an original, powerful play.

She is Marilyn March, a girl of extreme plainness, who yearns for a soldier or sailor sweetheart such as every other girl has. In desperation she announces that she is the wife of a soldier whose heroism is proclaimed in all the newspapers. At once the young man's mother seeks her out and in terror Marilyn faces her, sure that she will be exposed as an impostor. But the mother takes the girl to her heart—and her home. Marilyn's story is accepted without a question and she is transformed from an unprepossessing girl to a lovely young matron.

Marilyn's mental suffering is agonizing when news comes of her supposed husband's death, and later arrangements are made to make her his heiress. This is more than Marilyn can stand and she prepares to go away from the mother and the young man who occupies a room in the house. Marilyn has met him by accident and by chance she makes a discovery which arouses her suspicion.

In a flash it comes to her that the young man in reality is the son whose wife she is pretending to be and who is evading the draft. Furiously she taxes the mother with what she suspects and the elder woman breaks down, confessing everything.—Adv.

Exams For Normal To Be More Strict

More Attention To Be Paid To English Education Of Applicants In Future —Pay To Be Graded According To Length Of Study

In order that teachers who receive their diplomas from the Territorial Normal school shall be better prepared to teach the many races who attend the public schools of Hawaii, entrance requirements of the training school will be very much stricter this session, and all undesirable candidates will be eliminated. In the future no student will be admitted to any of the training courses who is notably deficient in the use of the English language.

In the past it has been the custom to grant the same pay to Normal school graduates, whether they have had a one or two year course. But the last act of the legislature provided that the scale of pay be arranged according to the scholarship of the teacher and the length of time in which she has studied.

For high school graduates a secondary diploma will be granted after one year's study, but if the student remains a year longer she will receive a first class diploma and a higher salary when she begins her teaching. For those who have attended high school for only one year a three year course has been provided, and after graduation the scholar will receive a secondary diploma. In addition there will be what is known as the extension, for those who have already graduated from the Normal school, and teachers recommended by the department of public instruction. There will also be a preparatory course of one year for grammar school graduates who are planning to take up normal work after one year of high school study.

The Normal school will begin its fall course, with the new requirements on September 22, the opening date of the public schools.

Was Hawaii Once A Continent Theory

Prof. Douglas R. Campbell, head of the botany department of Stanford university, thinks that in certain specimens of ferns found on the island of Hawaii he has established land connection at some period, between these islands and the groups to the south and west, through to the Malay Peninsula.

The particular ferns upon which stress is laid is a species of liverwort, a minute plant found in damp, shaded places. It exists on islands of the South Seas, the Malay Peninsula and here. Mr. Campbell says that Prof. T. A. Jaggar agrees with him, adding that there are geological indications that the islands of the Pacific were once connected.

Roosevelt Memorial Fund To Be Raised

Executive Committee To Have Representative From Each Island

Maui will be asked to select a representative for the Roosevelt Memorial Association which was formed last Friday for the purpose of raising $25,000 as the Territory's contribution to the memorial fund which is being raised for the late ex-president. M. F. Prosser was elected chairman and James A. Rath secretary. An executive committee of nine will be appointed containing representatives from each island. Five of them will be for Oahu, one each for Kauai, Maui, Molokai and Hawaii. The meeting was largely attended by some of the most representative men of Honolulu and the islands, many of them Democrats. While the quota is $25,000 the committee will be prepared to raise in excess of this amount if it is found necessary.

DISHONEST TRAFFIC IN WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued the following statement:

The Treasury has been greatly concerned by the receipt of reports of dishonest traffic in war savings certificates and stamps. These securities were not intended to be negotiable and, for the protection of the owners in case their necessities required, provision was made for redemption of war savings certificates at post offices upon ten day's notice, at a fixed price, representing the original purchase price with an addition for interest. No obstacles have at any time been placed by the Treasury in the way of redemption of these war savings certificates and it should be generally understood that the owner of a certificate has an absolute right to redeem it in accordance with its terms.

The government needs the money and hopes the owners of war savings certificates will retain them, but it will place no obstacle in the way of those bona fide holders who request repayment. On the other hand, the Secretary will exercise every means within the power of the Treasury, and has asked the co-operation of the Post Office Department, to prevent payment being made to those rascals who are buying the certificates and stamps for less than their redemption value in promptly turning them in to the Government for redemption at a profit and serves notice on those people who are engaging in this disreputable business that this is the settled policy of the Treasury.

In this connection attention is invited to the following extract from the instructions issued to Postmasters by the Post Office Department, under date of January 23, 1919, with respect to the redemption of war savings certificates presented by persons or firms known to be buying, or publicly offering to buy war savings stamps or certificates from the owners, unless positive evidence is submitted that the certificates were originally issued to the persons or firms presenting them for payment.

I urge all patriotic holders of war savings certificates and stamps to hold their certificates if they can, and, if they can not, to avoid all dealers in war savings stamps and redeem the certificates through the post office.
